

Maswi implores PPA review team to be guided by patriotism, public interest

By Joseph Muhozi, Dodoma

THE Chief Executive Officer of PPRA, Mr. Eliakim Maswi, has called upon the team of experts reviewing the Public Procurement Act, to let patriotism and considerations of public interest guide the exercise so that the results of their work get to serve the interests of the country, TPJ has learnt.

Mr. Maswi's call came about during a meeting he had in Dodoma with the team of experts from various public institutions, who are reviewing the law in order to draw up recommendations for improvement, in line with the directives of President Samia Suluhu Hassan, which she gave on 4 July, 2022.

Among the results President Samia was keen to see from the directives include minimisation of time taken by procurement processes and maximising attainment of value for money in projects.

The PPRA chief executive implored the team to be well focussed on framing recommendations that lead to an improved and business-friendly environment that would enable the Government procure specialised goods.

"Have cognisance of the great opportunity and privilege you have to enable the nation get legislation that will smoothen out current challenges and improve attainment of value for money in public procurement," said Mr. Maswi.

The team is made up of experts in law and procurement from the Ministry of Finance and Planning, Public Procurement Regulatory Authority, Public Procurement Appeals Authority, Procurement and Supplies Professionals and Technicians Board, Government Procurement Services Agency, Attorney General's Office; President's Office, Regional Administration and Local Government, as well as from various procuring entities.

Govt moves towards auditing all key aspects of procurement performance

By Paul Bilabaye, Dar es Salaam

THE Government plans to institute changes in the way procurement performance audits are conducted in order to bring about a more insightful assessment of attainment of value for money, TPJ has learnt.

This came to light in the speech of the Minister for Finance and Planning, Dr. Mwigulu Lameck Nchemba, when he was tabling the Government budget for the financial year 2022/23.

He said that the Government was working towards conducting real time performance audits instead of just financial audits in an effort to minimize loopholes in procurement systems that lead to loss of Government revenue.

Dr. Mwigulu told Parliament that the the Government would continue to strengthen both the Controller and Auditor General and internal audit units by providing them with capacity building programmes and increasing human capital in diverse fields such as information communications technology (ICT), engineering, quantity surveying, laboratory technology, law, and procurement, to hammer home the fact that audit is also relevant and necessary for fields other than finance.

The minister cited some shortfalls in Government spending, particularly in bulky procurement and development projects, whereas in some circumstances the law, regulations as well as audit requirements, were adhered to, yet misuse of funds occurred or projects were completed below standards.

“The Government will strengthen the internal audit departments to be able to conduct real time performance or value for money audits, instead of just financial audits, to minimize various loopholes,” said Dr. Mwigulu.

Furthermore, the minister assured the Parliament, that the Government would also amend public financial regulations to allow audit committees to include three external members so as to enhance independency and efficiency of audit committees which would submit quarterly reports to the Internal Auditor General.

The minister went on to issue a warning to accounting officers who fail to comply and to respond to CAG and IAG recommendations that they would be punished according to 2005 Public Finance Regulations which stipulate among other penalties, a deduction of 5 to 30 percent of salary per month and removal from their position.
